Abstract Iga Jeziorska

The study examines patterns of drugs use among young women in festival settings and their sexual experiences, including gender-based violence. Special attention is paid to the differences of sexual experiences sober and being under the influence of psychoactive substances, and relationships between the patterns of substance use and sexual experiences (including risky sexual behaviours) at music festivals. In this quantitative research, data has been collected via an on-line survey placed on Facebook pages of various music festivals in Poland and Hungary, in native languages.
